

Fraser Durie – Adam Smith College

I think the future for Skills for Work pupils is great because most of the response we've had back from the schools has been very positive that the pupils have come back with a better understanding of the world of work, better understanding of college and also working together in a different environment with other people you know in an adult environment cause college's are adult environments so it's given them a different insight into it. The lecturers treat them differently, the other students treat them differently, so there's a learning process that's over and above the actual qualification that they're doing.