

Learning Pathways in the Senior Phase and beyond

What are Learning Pathways?

A learning pathway is your journey through education and learning. You can choose courses, qualifications and learning experiences at any age or stage of your life. These learning choices are steps along your learning pathway. Learning pathways can help you to:

- map out the courses and qualifications that will help you to reach your objectives
- gain skills and knowledge
- improve your existing skills and knowledge
- take up new interests and change direction
- improve your prospects for employment
- enrich your life.

Your learning pathway may involve taking courses and qualifications either full time or part time while you are

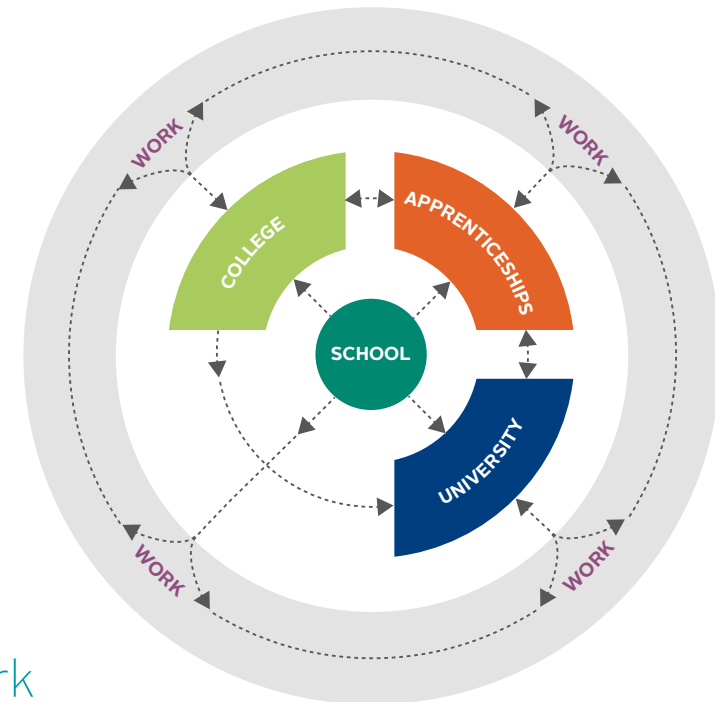

- at school
- at school and at college (shared placement)
- at college
- undertaking an apprenticeship (with training at college and/or in the workplace)
- at work
- at university
- online (SCHOLAR, Open University, distance learning)
- in combinations of the above.

There are additional learning opportunities in the community: local authorities, colleges and universities often run short courses for those who are 16+.

Future success must be built on a healthy mix of academic and vocational studies and qualifications with the emphasis on quality and employability.

Learning Opportunities: Pathways for All

Skills for learning, life and work

The Commission for Developing Scotland's Young Workforce

The Commission for Developing Scotland's Young Workforce, led by Sir Ian Wood, published its report 'Education Working For All!' in June 2014. The development of clear learning and progression pathways, designed to meet the skills development needs of young people and of employers is a key theme. Innovative partnerships and closer ties between schools, colleges, training providers, universities and industry are already in place and more are being developed. These partnerships deliver learning pathways which can include academic, vocational and skills-based qualifications, courses and apprenticeships. The recommendations in the report include: preparing young people better for work; college education which focuses on progression in learning and on employment; the further development of apprenticeships to include higher level skills to meet industry needs; an increase in partnerships between schools/colleges and businesses/employers; a strong equalities agenda.

Understanding Your Learning Pathway: The Scottish Credit and Qualifications Framework

Courses, qualifications and learning opportunities are the building blocks of developing skills and knowledge. The table below sets out the Scottish Credit and Qualifications Framework levels and uses colour-coding to show qualifications at those levels. SCQF Levels 1 to 12 create a common currency between different courses and qualifications which are delivered in various settings (school, college, work, university, online). You can see how the different courses are valued equally within the SCQF levels. The SCQF operates a system of credit points eg a National 4 and a National Certificate at SCQF Level 4 are both worth 24 credit points. These credit points help you to progress to your next learning level, as you achieve modules and/or qualifications.

Did You Know....?

- Schools will support young people into positive destinations. A 'positive destination' may be college, training, university, work or volunteering.
- Scotland's 25 publicly-funded colleges, organised into 13 college regions, offer a wide range of courses and qualifications at different levels, leading on to work, other college courses or university.
- Information on college websites about their courses often sets out the next steps in learning.
- Alongside its National Qualifications, the Scottish Qualifications Authority offers hundreds of work and skills-related awards and qualifications at all SCQF levels in fields such as digital media, quantity surveying, care, energy, construction, hospitality, life sciences, business.
- The report 'Education Working for All!' makes recommendations for schools which include: early careers advice and world of work knowledge prior to subject choice for the Senior Phase; meaningful work experiences; the delivery of college courses and apprenticeships through school-college-employer partnerships.
- The report also proposes the expansion of apprenticeship options to include foundation and advanced apprenticeships which are currently being piloted.
- Modern Apprenticeships are based in the workplace: accredited training and qualifications at different SCQF levels are delivered as you work and earn.
