Visitors will enter the building by the public entrance. The door itself cannot be seen from the road but will become apparent as you approach the building. The main door will open automatically.

You will be asked to go through security checks similar to those at airports. If a buzzing sound is heard whilst these are in progress, you may be subject to further checks by staff.

Accessible toilets are available throughout the building — staff will be happy to advise as to the location of your nearest facilities. Staff will also give extra assistance to guests with disabilities.

Upon entering the building itself you will find yourselves on the Garden level. Here you will see the Main Hall exhibition. You may also go on the tour, visit the café, browse the contents of the shop or visit any of the other public areas.

There are two committee rooms on the Garden Level, directly after the Main Hall. From here, you may take the lift or the stair to the second level where you may visit the public gallery and view the debating chamber.

The Scottish Parliament will be closed over the Christmas and New Year period only. Consult the website or notify our visitor services for more information. Come and visit at any other time — a warm welcome awaits you!
