Do you support electoral reform for General Elections?

Question 7

Study Sources 1, 2 and 3 then answer the question which follows.

SOURCE 1

Electoral reform

The debate on electoral reform of the House of Commons has been ongoing for a number of years. In May 2011, the British public were asked to vote in a referendum on replacing the current system, first-past-the-post (FPTP), with a form of proportional representation (PR) called the Alternative Vote.

More recently, Green MP Caroline Lucas proposed the Electoral Reform Bill as a Private Members’ Bill. The Bill received cross-party support from five different political parties. The rise in popularity of reform groups supporting change is evidence that the debate over electoral reform is not going to disappear, if recent activities are anything to go by.

There are two sides to the debate, with opponents of change arguing that the public want to retain the current system as they recognised that it works. Supporters of FPTP argue it is simple to use and provides stable governments as well as bringing other benefits. Furthermore, the desire for change is not fully supported by the current government or the Opposition party in the House of Commons.

If the critics of FPTP are to be believed, voters are unhappy with the current system. If this is the case, why did the 2017 General Election see the highest turnout figures for 20 years?

MPs have today rejected the Private Members’ Bill proposed by Green MP Caroline Lucas. If passed, the Bill would have seen a change in the voting system used in the House of Commons to a form of proportional representation. The Bill had originally received cross-party support but it was voted down by 81 to 74 votes. A disappointed Lucas commented that she would continue fighting for reform and argued that “the movement for a fairer voting system is stronger than ever - with support from across the Labour Party, UKIP, the SNP, the Lib Dems, Greens and people across the country”.

Fact file about elderly prisoners

The prison population is ageing. People over 65 are the fastest growing age group in custody. In March 2017 there were 102 prisoners aged over 80 in Scotland, and 5 who were 90 or older. These types of prisoners have needs that are constantly changing and a purpose-built prison would help to meet their needs. Recently there has been increasing evidence that the physical needs of elderly prisoners are not being met in current prisons, as the buildings are not suitable.

The Scottish Prison Service (SPS) has 13 publicly managed prisons and 2 privately run prisons. There have been some changes made to these buildings to cater for elderly prisoners and this has made life easier for some.

Most prisons are designed for the young and able. In the UK, there is only one prison that has a wing specifically designed for the elderly. Most prison buildings are multi-storey with only stairs and no lifts. Many have narrow doors and corridors. The conditions the prisoners have to live in make for a particularly intimidating and inaccessible environment for elderly prisoners. Prisons now have more elderly inmates with disabilities such as dementia or mobility problems, including some who are in wheelchairs. Other prisoners have incontinence issues.

One prison has tried to accommodate these prisoners; they have put in a stairlift and adapted 10 of their cells to meet elderly people’s needs. This cost the Government £560,000 but has made a massive difference to elderly prisoners’ lives.

Indonesia today

Indonesia has rich biodiversity with lots of natural resources. It currently exports coal, palm oil and rubber to countries such as China, but relies on imports of finished goods such as smartphones and processed chemicals. Indonesia is the world’s biggest producer of palm oil, farming over 6 million hectares. It exports 14.4 billion dollars’ worth of palm oil while Malaysia exports 9.1 billion dollars’ worth.

Indonesia is the only ASEAN member of the G20, and the G20 is responsible for 85% of the global economy. Indonesia is the world’s largest supplier of instant noodles. Two of the world’s top 500 companies are based in Indonesia.

In the past, Indonesia has experienced conflict within the country which meant that the government spent more money on policing than on the military. As a result the country had a low international ranking for military spending. This could be a problem in the future as China seeks new territory in the seas near Indonesia, and the country will have to protect itself.

Tourism is currently worth almost 10 billion dollars annually. There are currently 10 million visitors each year which the government hopes to double by 2020. There is now a government department to promote tourism.

Using Sources 1, 2 and 3, what conclusions can be drawn about the influence of Indonesia?

You should reach a conclusion about each of the following:

- The importance of the military to the Indonesian Government.
- The importance of Indonesia's exports.
- Indonesia's influence within alliances.
- The importance of tourism to Indonesia.

Your conclusions must be supported by evidence from the sources. You should link information within and between the sources in support of your conclusions.

Your answer must be based on all three sources.
