Source A (below) is by a modern writer.

After the meal was finished, the guests stayed in their places while the tables were cleared and the mixing-bowl set up. When everything was ready and the gods had been honoured, the drinking began. Sometimes there were hired entertainers, sometimes the guests entertained themselves. Instruments hanging on the wall were taken down and played, but there were other ways to pass the time. One group of people, however, was never to be found amongst the party-goers.

It is the day of an Assembly meeting and already morning, but the Pnyx is deserted. The citizens are chattering in the market place, dodging the rope dripping with red dye. Even the Presidents of the Assembly have not arrived. They will be late, and when they finally come they will push and fight each other for a place in the front row. As for me, I have come here ready to shout, to interrupt and insult the speakers if they talk about anything other than making peace.

6. Evaluate the usefulness of Source B for the study of the Assembly (Ecclesia) in Athens in the 5th century BC.

You could comment on who wrote it, when they wrote it, what they say, why they say it or what it has missed out.

Source A (below) is a re-enactment of Roman soldiers training.

Source B (below) was written by the Roman historian Tacitus about the treatment of Roman soldiers in the 2nd century AD.

The commander ordered the soldiers to build a mine in the territory of a local tribe in a search for silver. The amount of silver found was small and soon ran out. But the legionaries were forced to do back-breaking work as they dug channels and laboured underground in a way which would have been exhausting even if they had been above ground. This tiring work was happening in several areas and the soldiers were worn out by it.
