This article discusses the attitudes of young people in Spain towards cars.

Cambios de actitudes hacia el coche

Para muchos jóvenes, adquirir un automóvil todavía es algo muy importante en la vida porque lo consideran como un rito de iniciación en la vida adulta, y opinan que es un símbolo de madurez y prosperidad. Sin embargo, los tiempos están cambiando, y para muchos jóvenes españoles, tener coche propio ya no es un símbolo de libertad.

Pongamos un caso: José Miguel, madrileño de 18 años, acaba de sacarse el carné de conducir. Sin embargo, no tiene ninguna intención de comprarse un coche: “prefiero invertir el poco dinero que tengo en otras cosas o gastarme el sueldo en comprarme dispositivos tecnológicos y en ir de copas. Es más, siempre hay alguna alternativa. Puedo trasladarme en transporte público, y siempre existe la posibilidad de compartir coche con mis colegas para ir al trabajo o a la universidad”, explica José.

La industria del automóvil está preocupada porque poco a poco la tecnología está ocupando el lugar del coche como símbolo de estatus social. Un estudio reciente ya ha confirmado la tendencia: los menores de 25 años no sienten la necesidad de adquirir bienes tradicionales.

Isabel Báez, presidenta de la Confederación Nacional de Autoescuelas, afirma que el descenso de conductores jóvenes se debe en gran parte a la crisis económica. Isabel nos cuenta: “He notado recientemente que ya no vienen tantos jóvenes a tomar clases de conducir en cuanto cumplen los 18, no porque no quieran, sino porque no pueden”. Pero el futuro no es del todo negativo, opina Isabel. Explica: “Estoy convencida de que cuando mejore la situación económica, volverán los jóvenes a las autoescuelas. Los que vienen lo hacen con la misma ilusión que antes”.

Cambios en la forma de viajar

Las nuevas tecnologías están transformando la forma y la frecuencia a la hora de viajar. El sociólogo, Javier Elzo, ha publicado un estudio en el que afirma que el uso habitual de las redes sociales ha reducido la necesidad de los jóvenes de utilizar el coche. Esta conexión constante con amigos, hace que ya no sea tan imprescindible salir de casa para estar con alguien. Según Javier, lo más sorprendente del estudio fue que viajar en transporte público se adapta mejor al nuevo estilo de vida derivado del uso de la tecnología, ya que tiene la ventaja que te deja las manos libres para utilizar el teléfono móvil mientras viajas.

Ya que tener un coche no es necesario para el día a día, cada vez más a menudo muchas personas deciden alquilar un coche con los amigos a la hora de irse de vacaciones. Marta González y Luisa Fuentes hacen esto con frecuencia: “alquilar un coche para irse de viaje nos aporta ventajas tales como poder compartir los gastos de viaje y es una manera de descubrir sitios que siempre hemos querido visitar sin gastar un dineral. Trasladarse de esta manera es algo ya tan natural como tomar el metro o el tren”.

Cambios en las actitudes

El creciente rechazo del coche no es solo cuestión de dinero. Según una encuesta publicada en un periódico nacional, ha habido un cambio de actitudes entre la población de 15 a 29 años. La encuesta destaca tres cambios de actitud significativos en cuanto a los coches: los jóvenes desean contaminar menos su entorno, esto demuestra hasta qué grado su conciencia ecológica está aumentando. Del mismo modo, muchos jóvenes reconocen la necesidad de llevar una vida activa en vez de estar atascado en coche. La encuesta indica que, a la hora de comprar un coche, hay algunos que tienen más en cuenta factores como la eficiencia del motor y la cantidad de carburante que usa el coche en desplazamientos cortos. Pese a las nuevas tecnologías y los cambios de prioridades, el coche sigue siendo un objeto icónico. Por otra parte, es cierto que los jóvenes se sirven de alternativas a la hora de desplazarse para satisfacer las necesidades de ese nuevo estilo de vida.
